Learning for Life uses teaching techniques such as role-playing, reflective and moral dilemma exercises and hands-on activities. The reflective portion of each lesson is the pivotal point at which youth have the opportunity to think about what they've learned and integrate the experience into real life situations. The activities in each lesson are easily related to one or more core curriculum subjects. Lessons are designed to reinforce academic, social, ethical, and character development skills in various areas, such as critical and creative thinking, conflict resolution, decision making, life skills, self-esteem, writing and language arts, and citizenship.
